2007. Hardcover. Book Condition: New. 250 Womens empowerment is a comparatively new concept in the domain of womens development. It is being felt increasingly the womens subordination and exploitation is a result of their powerlessness in patriarchal society- hence the need for empowerment. Empowerment is a complex term and may be measured in terms of womens freedom to shape their lives, their control over resources, their access to basic facilities, their level of political participation, their ability to take their own decisions and let them accepted by family and society and their ability to remove hindrances in their path to progress. This book provides valuable information about rural women of Uttarakhand regarding all the above mentioned criteria, on the basis of primary data collected by the author for her research project and secondary data collected from other research studies. Rural women of Uttarakhand are know for their courage, perseverance and hard work. They are active in socio-political movements and are striving to improve their lives. But they still face many problems and need more guidance and encouragement from government and non-government agencies to empower themselves. About The Author:- Dr. (Mrs) Zainab Rahman, has been teaching Sociology for the past two decades. She has many research papers to her credit, which were presented at National and International Seminars and Conferences. Her articles have been published in books and journals of repute. Her first book, Women and Society was published two years back and was well received. She hails form the historic city of Hyderabad, where she received her education. Her adult life has been spent mostly in the picturesque Dehradun. She has travelled widely and lived abroad for some years. She had a chance of studying different cultures and noting the similarities and differences in various societies and populations. Womens studies...
