Not illustrated. 1912 Excerpt: .so if there is a growth of pea vines on the land, which would be all the better. We recommend the following method of fertilization: let the potatoes follow a crop of corn and peas, and the fall previous to planting scatter on a liberal amount of well rotted manure and turn under deeply along with the pea vines. This will put the land in good condition for early preparation, as the spring crop of potatoes should be put in the first half of February whenever weather conditions permit of the working of the soil. These manures should be supplemented with commercial fertilizer, applied in the drill just previous to planting, at the rate of 600 to 800 pounds per acre, consisting of two parts cotton seed meal and one part high-grade acid phosphate. For the main crop, both commercial and local, the Triumph is still the standard in this section, although there is another variety, the Irish Cobbler, that is rapidly coming to the front, and bids fair to supplant the Triumph on account of its being a heavier yielder, and equally as good in quality and general appearance, early maturity, etc. The question of the second, or fall crop of potatoes is also of considerable importance, and a matter concerning which there is not much reliable information obtainable. Here, again, the question of thorough preparation becomes the most important consideration. It is well to remember that the potato is naturally a cool weather plant,...
