Not illustrated. 1837 Excerpt: $x^2 \times x^3 = x^5$ $x^j \times x^i = x^{j+i}$ x^j and so on. Here 2, 3, 4, c. are called exponents of x . Similarly, $(a + b) \times (a + b)$ is written $(a + b)(a + b)(a + b)(a + b)$ and so on. The following results may now be easily found: The beginner's common mistake is, that x multiplied n times by x is the n th power. This is not correct; x multiplied once by x (xx) is the second power; x multiplied n times by x is the $(n + 1)$ th power. Now why, instead of 1, the rational answer, did we obtain j ;, which has no meaning? Because we applied the preceding rule to a case which does not fall under it. That rule was, to divide a power by another power of a less exponent, c , and was derived from the preceding rule of multiplication, which rule of multiplication did not apply to any cases except where both factors were powers of x , and, consequently, where the exponent of the product was greater. than the exponent of either factor; that is, where X is the product, and 3 one of the factors, that rule does not apply unless b be less than a . When we come to this symbol (x) we must do one of two things, either, 1. Consider x as shewing that a rule has been used in a case to which it does not apply, strike it...
